Date paper is due

Your paper should be two pages in length, double-spaced. You should use Times font, size 12, with 1 or 1.25 inch margins. At some appropriate point in your paper you should parenthetically cite your source. If it’s our textbook, then it should look like this (Baron, Branscombe, & Byrne, 2008). Or you could refer to an idea from Baron, Branscombe, and Byrne (2008). Those are the two ways to cite a source in your text. If your source is a journal article or book, then you would cite those authors instead.

Please note that there are no page numbers included, and authors are referred to only by their last names; in addition, the title of the book or article is not included. It’s appropriate to cite a source once per paragraph if all information in the paragraph is from the same source. Once you start a new paragraph, you should cite your source again. When citing a source that has three or more authors, you should list all three authors only the first time you cite the source; for subsequent cites, you should use the et al. format (Baron et al., 2008). Refer to the course web site for requirements about content.
Reference

The sources listed on this page should exactly match the sources that are cited in the text of your paper. If your source is a journal article or book, that is what you would list on this page. If you use more than one source, including web sites, you would include all of them on this page and change the heading to “References.” See the “APA Style” link on the course web site for information about how to format references from web sites or other types of sources.
